

Letter to the Editor:

J. Swift
City of London Council
Department for Urban Renewal,
LONDON, UK

Dear Sir,

Having several times noticed reference to the family of Rothschild in your newspaper, I wish to inform you concerning the flea-breeding practice of the Rothschilds (which have recently been publicized in the London Sunday Telegraph).

For many years past, indeed over a century, the City of London has been infested by gatherings of disreputable men and women, whom I, in my work for the City Council, have always regarded as a source of decay and ruin in this city. It is well known here that the real business of these people is concentrated in the city's flea-market, a horrible, degenerate and malodorous part of the city, and is to great degree controlled by the notorious family of swindlers, the Rothschilds.

On this flea-market, large amounts of paper, consisting in the property-titles to consignments of fleas and their joyfully expected progeny, are exchanged by the Rothschilds and their wicked associates every day. Unlike many other flea-markets, the City of London flea-market has continued to deal exclusively in fleas, only occasionally concealing its true identity under the code-names "euro-market," "tanker-market" and "real-estate market."

Many countries, cities and industrial companies have been exploited in their weaknesses and have had pressed upon them, in this reeking atmosphere of the flea-market and in exchange for money, contracts called "loans," according to which the victim commits himself to accept the conditions of life most conducive to the rapid multiplication of the Rothschilds' fleas and, of course, the accompanying diseases. These conditions include a lowering of the standard of living and a prevention of industrial development. The Rothschilds, of course, rush their deliveries of fleas out to the unfortunate victim-recipient as rapidly as possible.

The Rothschild flea-market, being a source of disease and epidemic, has become a threat to our future health and survival! As the person elected to be responsible for the modernization and development of my city, I have long considered the Rothschild flea-market as the principal obstacle to progress. But now its effects are spreading throughout the world! I discover that the Rothschild family is secretly planning even worse horrors. According to the Sunday Telegraph (June 27, page 3), there was held, in a Rothschild family rural hide-out, a world conference of flea-breeders, where over 100 associates of the world's flea-markets gathered to discuss the furtherance of their atrocious profession. The real decisions, concerning the development of faster-breeding fleas, have been kept secret, but my newspaper let one fact slip: the evil genius of the family, Miriam Rothschild, is presently engaged in breeding a new race of plague-fleas in her cellar!

This menace to world peace and prosperity must be stopped! Rumor in London now has it that the beetle-collecting New York family of the Rockefellers and the Rothschild flea-breeders are engaged in a fight to the finish for world power, for who will impose the world of devastation and ruin they want for their beetles and fleas! You must help us now to stamp out this vile plague: we have only little time left!

Yours urgently,
J. Swift