Preface

The first men who arrived on this immense Ibero-American continent, toward the end of the fifteenth century, were Spanish soldiers—pioneers, they were called—who brought God's wonderful message of conversion and salvation.

This message conveyed not only the spiritual salvation of man after his journey through this world, but also proposed an order of human life that would further the goal of salvation.

Their sword, hard and true, like the Cross, said that they were heirs to a social order, the culture of the Greeks, the political-military order of the Romans, the religious order of the Crusades; and that, through the efforts of Spain, they engaged in God's wonderful plan to take the faith even to the humblest of men on the planet.

And thus, with such tremendous spiritual and heroic force, was born our dear Ibero-America, as well as the race which would fill it: the criollo, a harmonious blend of European warrior and noble Indian.

Over the last 200 years, we Ibero-Americans have been the object of constant threats to this religious, cultural, and political order. Various imperialisms, with ever-different guises and methods, brought unto these lands—blessed from birth by the Cross of Christ—the cruelest, most degrading and wanton forms of subjugation.

Our liberators, true to their lofty and valiant heritage and as veritable prophets, attempted, even at the expense of their lives, to stir the consciousness of those who possessed the talent required to alter their brethren's fate. Sadly, and despite military victory throughout the continent, they were unable to attain their political objective—a United States of Ibero-America—run aground in the sands of political expediency, falsehood, and betrayal.

Today the voice of our peoples (not of their illegitimate leaders) cries out for the identity hinted at by history.

The history of the Ibero-American military is, in every case, the backbone of the lives of each and every one of our peoples. This is why the current, acting rulers of the world (the "new world order") have set out to eliminate Ibero-America's security and Armed Forces, the last line of defense against total national submission.

Preventing such a huge wrong undoubtedly lies in the hands of brave citizens, true soldiers descended from noble Ibero-American ancestry.

This present work, which I am very pleased to preface, will surely contribute many important elements of judgment to face the challenging circumstances before us.

I conclude with the words of His Holiness John Paul II, of October 12, 1984, in Santo Domingo, which constitute, for me, the mission: "Latin America, through your faith in Christ, resist those who would drown your vocation of hope!"
